“Prayer in the House: The History of Legislative Prayer”

Since 1789, each legislative day in both the United States House of Representatives and in the US Senate has convened with prayer. As with most things Ceremonial, there is a history that surrounds this practice that is worthy of consideration. It behooves us, both as compatriots and as communities of faith, to explore both the traditions and the conditions that have played a significant role in our country’s understanding of, and commitment to, the separation of Church and State. This lecture is intended to open the windows to history and the doors to discussion.
